One day, Krishna's mother Yashoda Maa stood at the doorway, her face red with anger and her eyes filled with tears. She was surrounded by her neighbors, each complaining about little Krishna's mischief.

"He entered my kitchen through the window and stole all the butter," said an old lady.

A young man complained, "Krishna untied my cows and let them roam freely in the forest."

A girl, holding a broken water pot, explained, "He threw a stone of my pot while I was walking back from the river after collecting water. All the water spilled on me, and Krishna Just laughed, shouted 'Happy Holi,' and ran away."

Krishna Kills Demoness Putana

In Gokul, everyone loved baby Krishna. Meanwhile, far away in his kingdom, the evil King Kansa lived in fear of a prophecy: Devaki's eighth son would kill him.

Kansa found out that Devaki's eighth child had escaped from the prison, but he did not know where the baby was. Desperate to stop the prophecy, he ordered a wicked demoness named Putana to kill every baby under ten days old in his kingdom.

Putana set out to find the babies and eventually came to Krishna's village. She changed herself into a beautiful young woman and began walking through the village. But the whole village seemed strangely

Little Krishna lay on the soft, muddy ground, resting his head on a big wooden mortar. He suddenly woke up, feeling a familiar rumble in his tummy. It was lunchtime, and he wanted his favorite snack-yummy butter!

Without thinking twice, Krishna tried to get up and go find some. But wait, something was holding him back. He looked down and saw a thick rope tied around his little ankle, and the other end was tied to Krishna giggled, remembering what had happened that morning. He had been up to all sorts of fun mischief making Yashoda Man very
